“ This is a great blog, and timely for me, because I am very seriously considering medical school after having worked as a teacher. I have occasionally questioned whether I should really be a teacher. I KNOW for a fact that I would be a much better doctor than teacher. I love medicine and healthcare, and most of all, I love people. And, I know that there is nothing else, no other profession that would make me happy. I feel as though I have to do it. The problem? I??m in my early fifties, and although I am willing to make the time and financial commitment, I wonder now if it will be worth it, since I??ll likely be finishing when I??m in my sixties, obviously. But even with that, I know I??ll deeply regret it if I don??t pursue it.

“ I am devastated to hear about Mae, one of the kindest, coolest women I have ever met. I was a caregiver for her for a short time in my early twenties. I had a falling out with the company I worked for and left without saying goodbye. It's something I've always regretted, something I will now for the rest of my life. She and I laughed and told each other stories and I heard all about her family, looked at their pictures. Please know that someone out there thinks of her often. Is thirty years old now and misses her wisdom and companionship.
